

ICOM Define – Consultation 4

Overview: This round of consultation is the opportunity for committees to express their preferences on the five proposals by ranking the definitions and also to suggest brief alterations to their preferred proposal.

How ICOM Define arrived at these five proposals?

After receiving the report of Consultation 3, ICOM Define broke into five groups of 4 members that represent different backgrounds, regional origins, and professional experience. All proposals have been developed by the groups, taking into account feedback provided by the entire committee, which considers the data received from the consultations, legal aspects, cultural specificities, and translation issues regarding specific terms and syntax. All proposals prioritize the top terms that were evaluated in the previous Consultation, which explains why there are similarities reflecting the shared notions that unify the ICOM community.

The primary language in which the proposals were drafted was English, and translations were worked on by subgroups in French and Spanish. The PDF form includes the proposals in all three languages. We welcome, within this Consultation, any suggested edits to the translations.

How to fill Consultation 4?

- Committees must rank the five proposals.
- For their top selection, committees may suggest a modification to a word or phrase. But suggestions can only be made by using words/phrases from the other proposals, as those were the terms already evaluated in Consultation 3. No new terms can be proposed at this point.
- Committees will also have the opportunity, through a text box, to justify why they ranked their fifth choice in last place.
- Committees can propose an alternative translation into Spanish or French of their top selection.
